

The Giving snake

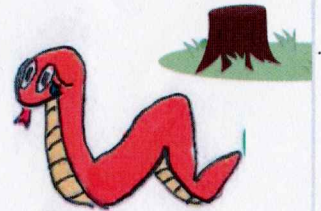

One day a boy met a snake. The boy would play with the snake so he asked the snake to give him his tooth to play with like a stick but now the snake wouldn't hunt.

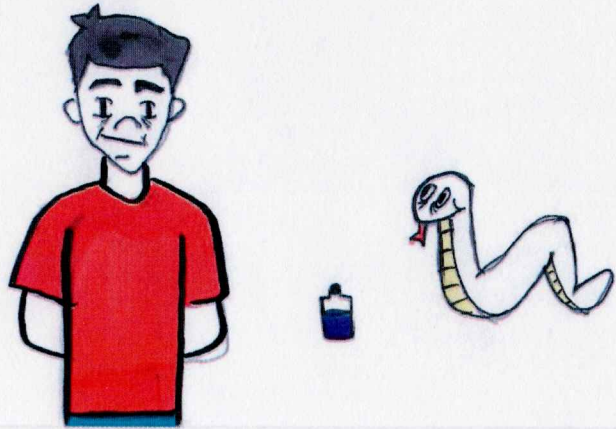

Now the boy became a young man with big objectives so when he saw his friend the snake again, without asking him how he was, he asked the snake to give him his skin to make shoes and bags to sell them but now the snake was cold in his home.

Now the young man became a man who wanted to build his family so when he saw his friend the snake again, he asked him to give him his home, the forest, to build a village for the man's family but now the snake had nowhere to live.

Now the man became aⁿ old man and he was very sick so when he saw his old friend the snake again, he asked him if he could give him his venom. The snake did so and he saved the old man but the snake could no longer defend himself.

One day the snake died and the very old man felt really really sorry to what he had done to the snake so he built a shellter for all the snakes, where no one would hurt them like he had
